Dear Diary

It's the way he looks at me when he thinks no one else is watching. There's always a glance—just a moment, but it's enough to make my heart race. When I'm polishing the silver or dusting the parlor, I feel his eyes on me. It's different from the way he looks at anyone else. I try to tell myself it's nothing, but then there's the way he lingers. He'll stand at the door, watching me, offering a soft smile before walking away.

Just yesterday, while I was cleaning the drawing room windows, he came in. He didn't say anything at first, just stood there, looking. I pretended not to notice, but I could feel his gaze. When he finally spoke, his voice was gentle, softer than usual. "You've outdone yourself, Elma. The house shines because of you," he said, stepping closer than he ever has before. His hand brushed mine as he handed me a fresh cloth—like he always does when I'm struggling with the higher windows. But this time, he held on for a second too long. The warmth of his touch lingered even after he pulled away. I wonder if he knows what it does to me, these fleeting touches, these stolen glances.It's not just today either. He's been doing this for months now—finding little ways to be near me. At first, I thought I was imagining it, but now I know better. There's something unspoken between us. I see it in his eyes every time they meet mine.

Dear C. C.,

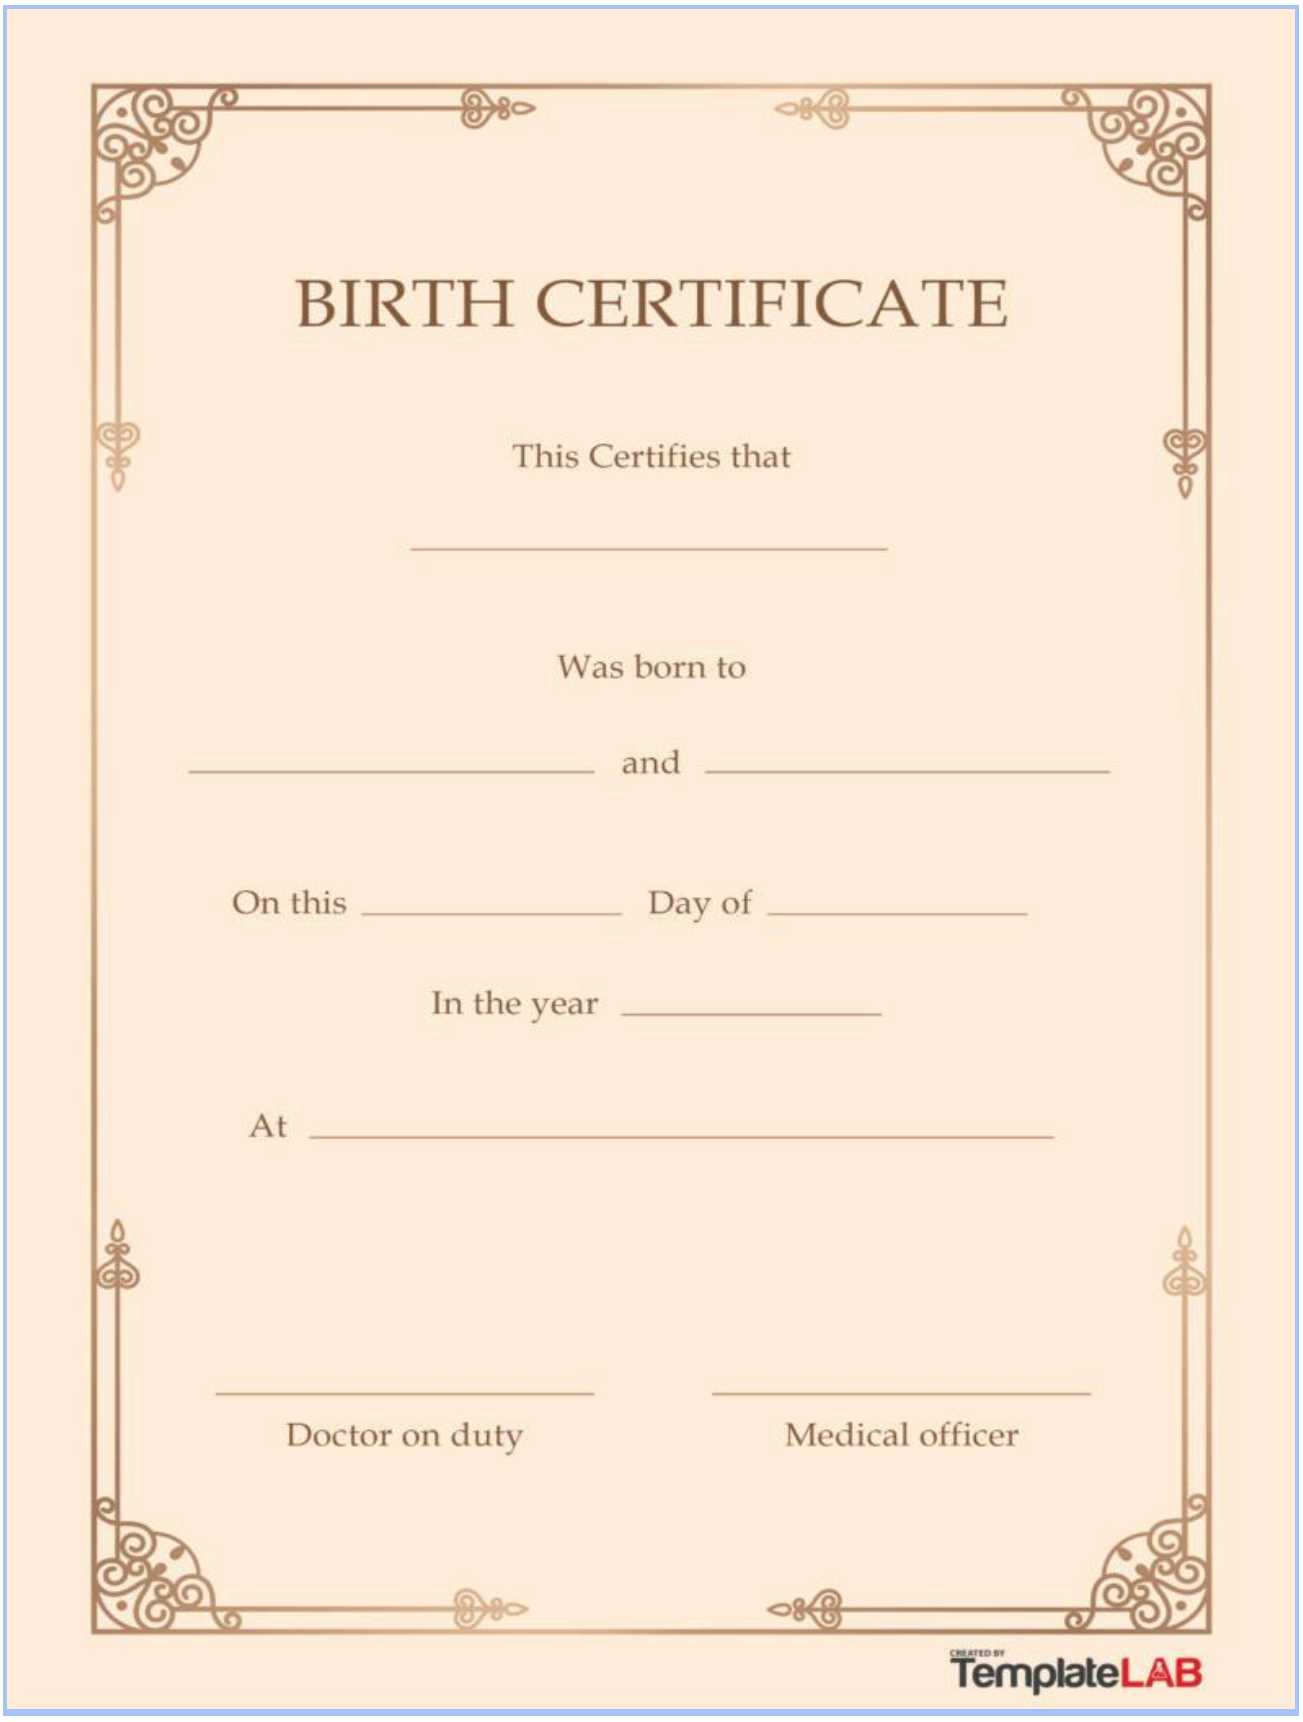

I've been thinking long and hard about the situation you've found yourself in, and I feel it's time we have a serious conversation about the bank's future—and yours. I understand you've invested heavily in the truck company, and the war did bring some success. But now, with the economy in a downturn, your debts are mounting, and I fear for the consequences if they remain unsettled.

As your brother and your business partner, I'm urging you to take action before things spiral further out of control. The bank can only stay above water for so long if your debts continue to grow. It's not just your reputation at stake but the bank's standing as well. The longer you wait, the more likely it is that we'll all be dragged down with you.

Please consider selling off some of your assets, settling your debts, or restructuring the company before it's too late. We cannot afford for the bank to be compromised, and I don't want to see you or the family suffer any more than you already have.

Yours,

William

A Call to Our Community: Let Us Build Together!

In our beloved town of Parkersburg, United Methodist Church now stands on the hallowed grounds of the former Episcopal Church. As we continue to serve the faithful, we humbly ask for your support to rebuild and enhance our place of worship and community.

Our Goal: $2,500
We call upon the kind hearts and generous souls of Parkersburg to help us raise $2,500 towards the new expansion project. Your contributions will go toward creating a sanctuary for all. Young and old, rich and poor. A place where our community can grow faith, fellowship, and service. All contributions will be matched by a very generous member of our community! He has pledged to match the entire goal if we meet it, so please contribute!

In days past, this land saw the rise of the Baptist congregation in 1903 when they, too, raised funds for their cherished church and magnificent pipe organ. Now, it is our turn to build on this legacy, honoring both the past and the future.

How You Can Help:
Give any donations to Mrs. Lemon

Attend our special fundraising services and community events

Spread the word of this noble cause to your family, friends, and neighbors

Let us carry the torch of faith and light the way for generations to come.
Together, we shall build a house of God that will stand for years to come.

"Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen."
—Hebrews 11

Dear Lyle, We will find a place where Susie is not there to find us and drag us away from each other. She doesn't understand our love, not even her religion could understand our love. Meet me tonight behind the house at 7, don't be late. I finally finished weaving the gift for you that I've been talking so much about.
