Mary Wolf's Round 3 Bio:

Role: Mary Wolf is C.C. Wolf's wife, and though their relationship was complicated, she remained dedicated to her family and their estate. She's poised, intelligent, and deeply protective of her family's image, though recent tragedies have left her shaken. The death of her husband has been a tremendous shock, and now, she's grappling with suspicions and the unraveling of secrets she never anticipated.

What Mary Thinks of Others:

- C.C. Wolf (Her Husband): Mary suspects that Elma, one of their servants, might have become so enraged with C.C. that she killed him. Despite this, Mary doesn't think C.C.'s actions justify such an extreme response. She also doesn't believe his death was due to poisoning or anything related to her sleeping pills, as his symptoms don't align with the effects of those medications.
- Carley Hamilton (C.C.'s Illegitimate Daughter): Mary feels sorry for Carley. The poor girl has suffered due to secrets she had no control over, but Mary keeps her distance on the topic. She will only admit that C.C. is Carley's biological father if guests already know or figure it out. Otherwise, she refrains from sharing this painful piece of gossip.
- Sam Dawson (The Farm Tenant): Mary harbors sympathy for Sam, recognizing that his relationship with C.C. ended on bad terms. She views Sam as a heartbroken man, rather than a murderer. Though Sam expressed feelings for Mary in a letter, she never responded, believing him to be kind but not capable of murder.
- Sarah (Family Friend): Mary thinks Sarah genuinely wants to help, but doubts she knows much about what truly happened. While she appreciates Sarah's concern, she doesn't consider her a major player in the investigation.
- William (The Banker): Mary knows William is aware of the family's financial troubles, and while it's possible that desperation could have driven him to act, she doesn't see him as a likely killer. He's too calculated to risk everything over money.
- Lyle Wilson (The Chauffeur): Mary knows Lyle loves the estate and is deeply attached to it. She's unsure how he'll handle this loss, fearing it will hit him hard. She doesn't suspect him of being the killer but worries about how he'll react now that C.C. is gone.

Clues Mary Knows About:

- David Martin Hamilton's Obituary: This obituary subtly reveals that David, Carley's father, was likely infertile due to chronic health issues. It suggests that C.C. Wolf is Carley's biological father. Mary is reluctant to discuss this openly unless guests figure it out.
- S.D.'s Love Letter: Sam Dawson once wrote a love letter to Mary, offering to take her away from her troubled life. She never responded. Mary now wonders if Sam's feelings had any influence on the murder but believes he's too kind to have killed C.C.
  "Sam never would've hurt anyone. He didn't have it in him. But what do I know? Maybe I should've written back."

Sarah Wolf – Bio Sarah's Thoughts on Others: Round 3

- C.C. Wolf (Her Family Friend): Sarah believes that everyone is aware C.C.'s death was no accident. While she doesn't have hard proof, her instinct tells her that Carley, C.C.'s illegitimate daughter, is the one responsible. Sarah thinks Carley is furious after realizing, through her father's obituary, that C.C. was her biological father all along. This realization, in Sarah's mind, could be enough to drive Carley to murder.
  "C.C. didn't just die. This was a murder, and I can't shake the feeling that Carley had something to do with it. She must be furious after reading what that obituary really meant."
- Carley Hamilton: Sarah is convinced that Carley is the murderer. She's certain that Carley pieced together the truth about her father after reading David Hamilton's obituary, which subtly reveals that David wasn't her biological father. Sarah sees this as the catalyst for Carley's anger and possibly her motive for murder.
  "Carley has every reason to be angry. After reading that obituary, she must have realized who her real father was… and now look what's happened."
- Sam Dawson: Sarah doesn't think Sam has the temperament to be the murderer. She knows about Sam's past affection for Mary, but she believes his love for her wouldn't drive him to kill C.C. She sees him as more of a tragic figure than a suspect.
  "Poor Sam. He's always been a little lost, especially after things went wrong with Mary. But a killer? I don't think so."
- Mary Wolf: Sarah views Mary as someone who has suffered deeply from the chaos surrounding her family, and while she doesn't suspect Mary of any wrongdoing, she does believe Mary is hiding something. Whether it's about Carley or something else, Sarah feels like Mary isn't telling the full story.
  "I don't think Mary did anything, but I'm sure she's not telling us everything she knows. There's something about Carley… but I won't push."
- William (The Banker): Sarah doesn't think William had any real reason to kill C.C. She views him as pragmatic and level-headed, unlikely to commit murder unless there was some overwhelming financial motivation that Sarah isn't aware of.

"William knows about the money troubles, but I don't see him killing over it. He's too cautious for something like that."

- Lyle Wilson (The Chauffeur): Sarah finds Lyle's attachment to the estate somewhat concerning but doesn't think he had the heart to kill C.C. She feels sorry for him, as he's likely going to be hit hard by this tragedy.
  "Lyle's got a lot of feelings about this place, but murder? I don't think that's him. This will probably break his heart, though."

Clues Sarah Knows About:

David Martin Hamilton's Obituary (September 30, 1920):

Sarah knows this obituary holds the key to understanding why Carley might be angry enough to kill C.C. It reveals that David, her supposed father, suffered from infertility, meaning Carley's biological father must have been someone elseC.C. Wolf. Sarah won't explain the full meaning but will push guests to read between the lines.
"I don't need to say it, but if you read carefully, you'll see what's really going on with Carley and C.C. It's all there."

1. The Belladonna in Sarah's Purse:
   Sarah carries belladonna, which she claims is just part of her beauty routine. She insists it's harmless and was used as a cosmetic to dilate pupils, which was popular in the 1920s. She denies any knowledge of its potential toxicity, brushing off any accusations of wrongdoing.
   "This? It's just for my eyes! It's not poison, and it certainly wouldn't hurt anyone. Why would I even carry poison with me?"
2. Sarah words in the guest book- Sarah Wolf- Brought Christmas gifts for the Wolf familyleft them in the parlor.

William – Bio Round 3

William, the banker and long-time friend of the Wolf family, is a man who understands the pressures of financial struggles. He has seen his fair share of business deals gone wrong and is not blind to the fact that C.C. Wolf's finances were in terrible shape. William is pragmatic, viewing situations through the lens of financial stability, but C.C.'s murder shakes him, especially because of what he knows about C.C.'s business dealings. While he doesn't outwardly show his emotions, the murder has left him deeply concerned and suspicious of those around him.

William's Thoughts on Others:

- C.C. Wolf (Old Friend): William knew that C.C.'s financial situation was dire. Despite this, he is shocked by the murder and believes that it wasn't motivated by money alone. He can't help but think that Samuel Dawson, who has had his own grievances, might have snapped and killed C.C. in a moment of rage. William sees a parallel between his own past business failings and the pressure that Sam may have been under. He thinks Sam, feeling like he had nothing left to lose, might have decided to end it all by killing C.C.
  "C.C. was in deep trouble financially, but I don't think that's why he was killed. Samuel Dawson, though... I know what it's like to be on the wrong side of a bad deal, and when you've got nothing left, sometimes the anger boils over. Sam might've thought there was no other way."
- Samuel Dawson: William is convinced that Sam is the killer. He sympathizes with Sam, understanding what it's like to be pushed to the edge by failed business ventures and personal disappointment. William thinks that Sam's longstanding issues with C.C. over Mary, and perhaps feeling like he had been wronged in life, led him to lash out in desperation.
  "Sam's had a hard life. Failed love, failed business... I wouldn't be surprised if he felt so trapped and angry that he decided to take it all out on C.C."

- Mary Wolf: William doesn't suspect Mary of any involvement in the murder. He sees her more as a victim of the circumstancesmarried to a man with mounting debts and personal secrets. He feels sorry for her, but doesn't think she had any role in C.C.'s death.
  "Mary's been through enough already. I doubt she had anything to do with this, other than being caught in the middle of it all."
- Carley Hamilton: William sees Carley as a tragic figure but doesn't think she's involved in the murder. He's aware of her strained relationship with C.C., but in his mind, Carley is more likely to act out emotionally rather than physically. He doesn't see her as a cold-blooded killer.
  "Carley's got her own problems, but I can't see her doing something like this. She's angry, sure, but not enough to kill."
- Sarah: William sees Sarah as someone who is too far removed from the financial drama to be involved. He doesn't think much of her one way or another and assumes she's just trying to help wherever she can.
  "Sarah? She's harmless. I doubt she knows much about what's really been going on."
- Lyle Wilson: William feels that Lyle is too devoted to the Wolf family and the mansion to be the murderer. He's aware that Lyle cares deeply about the estate and suspects that if anything, Lyle would want to preserve the family's legacy, not destroy it. However, he doesn't completely rule him out.
  "Lyle loves this place. If he were going to kill anyone, it wouldn't be C.C. He's too tied to the estate for that. But you never really know, do you?"

Clues William Knows About:

Words William wrote in the guest book- William Wolf
"Left some documents for C.C. to review, but he hasn't responded yet. The bank can't wait much longer on his decision.

- William found this letter in C.C.'s drawer, revealing that C.C. owed the bank a staggering $870,000, largely due to his failed investment in Dart Truck & Tractor Company. This letter shows how severe C.C.'s financial situation was, and William can't help but feel bad about it. He thinks the tension surrounding this debt might have played a role in Samuel Dawson's decision to kill C.C., perhaps after learning about it. William keeps this letter as a potential clue that explains why Sam might have been pushed to murder.

- "I found this letter in C.C.'s desk. He was in debtdeep, deep debt. I'm not sure if it's the reason he was killed, but it certainly didn't help. Maybe Sam found out… and maybe that's what pushed him over the edge."

The Strychnine: This a type of poison used for pest control, there is some found in you belongings but it just for killing pests and you can tell guests that.

Samuel Dawson – Bio Round 3

Samuel's Thoughts on Others:

- C.C. Wolf (Rival):
  Samuel always viewed C.C. as an obstacle between him and Mary. The fact that C.C. was rich and controlled so much of Mary's life made Samuel despise him, though he never acted on his feelings. With C.C. dead, Samuel is relieved, though he didn't have a direct hand in it.
  "C.C. always kept Mary under lock and key, like a bird trapped in a cage. I'll be honestI'm not sad he's gone. I just don't think it was me who put an end to him."
- Mary Wolf (Love Interest):
  Samuel's love for Mary has never waned, despite her silence and refusal to leave with him. He still holds onto the hope that Mary might see him as an escape from her troubles. He wants nothing more than to help her start a new life, away from the constraints of the Wolf Mansion.
  "I've loved Mary from afar for years. I'd still take her away from all this if she'd let me. I wrote her once… maybe she never saw the letter. Or maybe she just never wanted to."
- Verbina (Primary Suspect):
  Samuel firmly believes that Verbina is the murderer. In his mind, the maids know everything about the mansionthe secrets, the shortcuts, and the people. He's certain that if anyone had a reason to kill C.C., it would be Verbina. Elma, on the other hand, he somewhat trusts because she once helped him reach out to Mary.
  "It's gotta be Verbina. The maids know this house better than anyone, and if there was ever a reason to kill, they'd know it. She's been around long enough to have a motive. Elma's differentshe helped me once. Verbina, though? She's dangerous."
- Elma Parker (Not the Killer):
  Elma isn't a suspect in Samuel's mind. She once helped him pass a message to Mary, and for that, Samuel feels indebted to her. He doesn't believe Elma could be capable of murder, even if she had a motive.

"Elma's harmless. She helped me once, which makes me think she's not the one behind this. Verbina, though… I wouldn't put it past her."

- Lyle Wilson:
  Samuel doesn't think much of Lyle, though he's not sure whether or not Lyle could be involved. To Samuel, Lyle is just another cog in the machine, someone who follows orders rather than acts independently. He doesn't believe Lyle has the guts to commit murder.
  "Lyle? He's just a servant like the rest of them. I doubt he's got the nerve to actually kill someone."
- Sarah:
  Samuel sees Sarah as someone completely outside the situation. He doesn't give her much thought and doesn't see her as having any motive or involvement in C.C.'s death.
  "Sarah's just on the sidelines, like the rest of us. I don't think she's got anything to do with this mess."

Clues Samuel Knows About:

Love Letter to Mary:

"I wrote her, telling her I'd take her away from all this. She never replied. Maybe she never got it, or maybe she just didn't care."

1. Hemlock Poison Bill: Total: $31.25

Found in Samuel's cowboy hat, the bill for purchasing hemlock and other poisons is a piece of evidence that could implicate him. However, Samuel is quick to ask if the poison was actually found on C.C.'s body, using this to deflect suspicion. Hemlock, famously known as the poison that killed Socrates, is a slow-acting toxin that leads to muscle paralysis and suffocation. Though Samuel denies any intent to use the poison for harm, its discovery raises questions about his true motives.
"Yeah, I bought some hemlock. But was it found on the body? No, it wasn't. I've got nothing to hide."

Letter to C.C. Wolf

When asked tell people that you thought he would be publicly humiliated when people found out about his lack of money. Not that he would be murdered but you don't have much remorse over his death.

Mrs. Lemon – Bio Round 3

Mrs. (Susie, her name is a secret) Lemon, a well-known figure in the community, has long held a keen interest in the happenings at the Wolf mansion. As Verbina's sister, she often hears inside information from her, particularly about the mansion's secrets and financial troubles. Mrs. Lemon believes Lyle Wilson, the chauffeur, is responsible for C.C. Wolf's death. She has always thought Lyle was greedy and saw him as a younger version of C.C., driven by the same hunger for control and power. Mrs. Lemon suspects that Lyle killed C.C. to take over the mansion and inherit the assets before they could all disappear due to the mounting debts.

Mrs. Lemon's Thoughts on Others:

- C.C. Wolf (Victim):
  Mrs. Lemon never liked C.C. and always saw him as a greedy, self-centered man. His financial fall from grace came as no surprise to her. In her mind, C.C.'s demise was inevitable, given his reckless handling of the family's wealth. However, she doesn't believe C.C.'s death was a natural consequence of his financial troublesshe is convinced Lyle took matters into his own hands to ensure he inherited the estate.
  "C.C. always thought he was invincible, but his debts were his downfall. Lyle knew this and must have decided to take control before it was too late."
- Lyle Wilson (Primary Suspect):
  Mrs. Lemon is absolutely certain that Lyle is the murderer. According to what she's heard from Verbina, Lyle loves the mansion and has long been waiting for the moment when he could take it over. With the Wolf family's financial ruin looming, Mrs. Lemon believes that Lyle saw killing C.C. as his best chance to seize the assets before they were lost to debt collectors. To her, Lyle is just like C.C.greedy and willing to do anything to secure his future.

"Lyle's no different from C.C.both of them greedy, both of them power-hungry. I've heard from reliable sources that Lyle's been eyeing the mansion for years, just waiting for his chance to take over. And now, with C.C. gone, that chance is here."

- Mary Wolf:
  Mrs. Lemon sees Mary as a victim of circumstancestrapped in a life of dwindling fortunes and a failing marriage. While she sympathizes with Mary, she knows that Mary is powerless to stop the collapse of her family's wealth. Mrs. Lemon doesn't believe Mary had anything to do with C.C.'s death, seeing her more as a woman overwhelmed by the pressures of the mansion's financial collapse.
  "Mary's caught in a losing game. She's trying to keep things together, but even she can't stop the inevitable. Poor thing."
- Verbina (Trusted Source):
  Mrs. Lemon's primary source of information is her sister, Verbina, the maid. Verbina's stories about the Wolf mansion have shaped Mrs. Lemon's perspective on Lyle and the entire situation. While she doesn't suspect her sister of anything, Mrs. Lemon believes Verbina knows more than she lets on, especially when it comes to Lyle's ambitions.
  "Verbina's told me everything I need to know. She's seen how much Lyle loves that house, and she's heard things no one else has. If there's one person I trust to know the truth, it's my sister."
- Samuel Dawson:
  Mrs. Lemon doesn't think much of Samuel, seeing him as just another person struggling under the weight of the Wolf family's chaos. She doesn't see him as someone capable of murder but rather as someone who is frustrated and powerless, much like herself.
  "Sam's harmless. He's just another person who's been dragged down by C.C.'s mess. I don't think he's got it in him to kill anyone."
- Elma Parker:
  Like Verbina, Elma is another maid in the mansion, but Mrs. Lemon doesn't consider her a suspect. Elma's infatuation with C.C. is well-known, and Mrs. Lemon doesn't believe someone so lovesick could turn murderous. Elma is more of a pawn in the bigger game being played at the mansion.
  "Elma? She's too head-over-heels for C.C. to ever harm him. She's just another one caught in the chaos, like the rest of us."

Clues Mrs. Lemon Knows About:

Letter from Verbina to Mrs. Lemon:

"Verbina wrote to me about the Wolf family's financial ruin. C.C.'s debts are mounting, and Mary's doing all she can to keep things together. I'm not surprised things turned out the way they did. Lyle knew about the money troubles too, no doubt about it."

1. Lyle's Greed (From Verbina's Account):
   Mrs. Lemon has always heard from her sister Verbina about Lyle's ambition. According to Verbina, Lyle loves the mansion and has been waiting for years to take it over. This, combined with the knowledge of C.C.'s financial ruin, leads Mrs. Lemon to believe that Lyle killed C.C. to inherit the house and its remaining assets. She's convinced that Lyle saw C.C.'s death as an opportunity to gain control of the estate before everything crumbled under debt.
   "I've heard from Verbina that Lyle's been eyeing the mansion for years, just waiting for his chance. Now that C.C.'s gone, it looks like Lyle finally made his move."

Mrs. Lemon wrote a letter directly to Lyle. In it, she warned him to stay away from her sister Verbina, whom she sees as too good for him. Mrs. Lemon knows Lyle is driven by greed and ambition and is convinced he's capable of anything, including murder. She calls him out for scheming and lets him know that she's not fooled by his facade.

Elma's Bio: Round 3

- C.C. Wolf: Elma once harbored deep feelings for C.C., believing they shared something meaningful. After discovering the truth about Carly being his biological daughter through David Hamilton's obituary, Elma feels utterly betrayed. The love she once had for C.C. has turned into heartbreak and anger. She now sees him as someone who deceived not just her but also his wife, Mary. The betrayal weighs heavily on her, and she feels lost in the wake of it.
- Sarah: Elma is convinced that Sarah is responsible for C.C. Wolf's death. In her view, Sarah has always craved more attention and power within the house, and the murder would be her way of securing both. Elma suspects that Sarah sees this tragedy as an opportunity to elevate her status, finally getting everything she ever wanted, including control of the mansion. Elma views Sarah as cunning and ambitious, traits that could easily lead her to murder.
- Verbina: Elma has a complicated relationship with Verbina. They share a bond as fellow maids, and Verbina has tried to comfort Elma after she learned about C.C.'s betrayal. While Elma appreciates the support, she sometimes resents Verbina for seeming more composed or even indifferent to the drama unfolding in the mansion. Deep down, though, Elma knows that Verbina is also struggling in her own way, especially with her secret relationship with Lyle and her sister Susie's involvement.
- Mary Wolf: Elma has a deep sense of pity for Mary. She sees Mary as trapped in a loveless marriage, betrayed not only by her husband but also by life's cruel twists. Elma knows that Mary doesn't deserve the humiliation and pain caused by C.C.'s affair with Carly's mother. Although Elma feels sorry for her, she also feels a certain distance from MaryElma's own heartbreak prevents her from fully sympathizing, as her own feelings for

C.C. are too strong. Still, she hopes Mary finds peace, even if she can't bring herself to help.

- Carly: Elma has complicated feelings toward Carly. On the one hand, she feels sorry for Carly, as the poor girl has been dragged into a scandal not of her own making. On the other hand, Carly's very existence is a reminder of C.C.'s betrayal. Elma often catches herself feeling bitter whenever she sees Carly and tries to avoid her as much as possible. She worries that Carly will eventually learn the truth about her parentage, and the fallout from that revelation could tear the household apart.
- Lyle Wilson: Elma is highly suspicious of Lyle, though she doesn't think he's the murderer. She sees him as greedy, always scheming to take over the mansion and its assets. She knows from Verbina how much Lyle loves the house and how determined he is to control it. Though she believes Sarah is the true culprit, Elma keeps a close eye on Lyle, feeling that he's more dangerous than most people realize. His ambitions and growing confidence worry her, especially since he's so close to Verbina.
- Samuel Dawson: Elma sees Samuel as a man with a broken heart, someone who was once kind but has grown desperate and frustrated. She knows that Samuel had feelings for Mary, and while she feels bad for him, Elma also understands why Mary never returned his affection. Samuel's attachment to Mary seems a bit misguided to Elma, but she believes his feelings are genuine. Elma doesn't think he's capable of murder, but she worries that his bitterness could drive him to reckless actions.

Clues She Knows:

1. David Hamilton's Obituary: Elma has read David Martin Hamilton's obituary and understands what it impliesthat C.C. Wolf is Carly's biological father. This revelation devastated Elma, as she thought her connection with C.C. was genuine. She won't openly discuss the obituary's meaning unless the guests specifically point out the relationship between C.C. and Carly. If they do, Elma will admit that discovering this truth broke her heart.
2. Elma's Letter to C.C. Wolf: After learning the truth, Elma wrote a letter to C.C., expressing her heartbreak and anger. She felt utterly betrayed by him, having believed that he cared for her. In the letter, she confronts him about deceiving her and his wife. Elma refuses to stay silent about her pain and hopes that C.C. is haunted by the hurt he's caused. Like the obituary, Elma won't reveal this letter unless the guests figure out the relationship between C.C. and Carly. Verbina tries to comfort her, knowing how much Elma is suffering.

Verbina's Bio:

- C.C. Wolf: Verbina thinks that Mrs. Lemon is the one who killed C.C. She doesn't have concrete evidence, but in her mind, it makes sense that the pastor's wife would have been jealous of C.C. trying to take over the church. (and she is mad that Mrs.lemon is keeping her from Lyle. but guests need to figure that out on their own.) Verbina has always sensed tension between the Wolves and the Lemons, and her suspicion has been rooted in that. She feels no personal animosity toward C.C., but she's certain that someone like Mrs. Lemon, who was fiercely protective of her husband's position in the church, had a strong motive to want C.C. gone.
- Lyle Wilson: Verbina is fond of Lyle and feels sad that her sister, Susie, treats him so poorly. Lyle has always been kind to her, and though others might see him as ambitious or greedy, Verbina believes that Lyle has simply been misunderstood. She has heard whispers about his desire to take over the house and the assets, but she doesn't think that makes him a bad person. In fact, she wishes her sister could see Lyle's good side. She doesn't believe that Lyle is capable of murder, and it hurts her when people suggest he might be involved in C.C.'s death.
- Mrs. Lemon: Verbina is convinced that Mrs. Lemon is the killer. In her mind, Mrs. Lemon had always been envious of C.C. 's growing influence in the church and wanted to make sure he didn't take over. Verbina feels that Mrs. Lemon would go to any lengths to protect her husband and her status within the community. The idea that Mrs. Lemon might have killed C.C. out of jealousy fits perfectly in Verbina's mind, even if it's based more on instinct than solid evidence.
- Mary Wolf: Verbina has a lot of sympathy for Mary. She sees how hard Mary has been trying to maintain appearances despite the family's financial struggles. Verbina often overhears conversations about the mounting debt and knows how stressful it must be for Mary to handle everything on her own. Verbina's letter to her sister reflects the burden she feels watching Mary struggle. Even though Verbina believes that Mrs. Lemon is the killer, she knows that Mary is suffering in more ways than one, and she feels for her.

- Alfred Wolf: Verbina doesn't have strong feelings about Alfred. She knows him as a figurehead in the family, but she keeps her distance. He visits the house often, but Verbina doesn't interact with him much. She senses that he knows about the family's financial troubles but chooses to remain silent, which makes her wary of him. Still, she doesn't think Alfred would have any reason to murder C.C.
- Elma Parker: Verbina has a close bond with Elma. They have both been through a lot working in the Wolf household, and Verbina has tried to comfort Elma when she found out about C.C.'s affair and Carly's true parentage. Verbina knows that Elma is heartbroken and angry, but she doesn't think Elma is capable of murder. She believes Elma's fury is more about feeling betrayed than having an actual motive for killing C.C.

Important Clues & Info:

- Arsenic (Rat Poison) VERY IMPORTANT: Verbina is aware that she has access to arsenic, which is commonly used in rat poison, as part of her duties as a maid. She knows that arsenic was what killed C.C., and because she has the poison, guests will likely accuse her of being the murderer. When confronted, she will calmly explain that she did not use it to kill C.C. Verbina will insist she has no real reason to kill him and that someone else must have used the arsenic without her knowledge.
- Key Line to Say VERY IMPORTANT:
  If pushed further, she should mention, "One of my special friends asked to borrow it for some chore, but that was it," without revealing who that friend is. If guests specifically ask whether Lyle- her boyfriend borrowed it, she can admit that he did, but will add, "I don't think he would ever use it for anything bad."
- Arsenic Information:
  Arsenic is odorless and tasteless, making it difficult to detect when slipped into food or drink. The symptoms include vomiting, darkened nails, black spots on the skin, stomach pain, and pale skin due to dehydration. It causes organ failure, leading to death, and historically, it was used for malicious purposes due to its subtlety.
- The Letter to Her Sister:
  Verbina's letter to her sister reveals crucial information about the Wolf family's declining financial situation. She discovered that C.C. Wolf's accounts were in disarray, and the family was $870,000 in debt. Verbina knows this won't end well and fears it's only the beginning of the family's downfall. She also expresses her growing exhaustion and concern over her job security, as her wages are being lowered.
- Emotional Impact of the Clues:
  Verbina's letter reflects the emotional toll that working for the Wolf family has taken on her. She sympathizes with Mary but knows that things are falling apart. Her belief that

Mrs. Lemon killed C.C. is influenced by the chaos she sees in the household, but her certainty about the killer is based more on her gut feelings than any hard evidence

Carley's Round 3 Bio

C.C. Wolf
Carley is filled with conflicting emotions when it comes to C.C. She's angry that he never told her the truth about why he employed her. Now that she's pieced everything together, she knows that C.C. was her real father, and it hurts her deeply that he never came clean. At the same time, she feels a sense of sadness and lossknowing that they'll never have the chance to build a proper father-daughter relationship. Despite her anger, there's a part of her that pities him, knowing that he carried this secret with him until his death.

Mary Wolf
In Carley's mind, Mary is the most likely suspect. She's convinced that Mary would have been furious at C.C. for not being loyal to her, especially after discovering that C.C. had fathered a child with another woman. Carley suspects that Mary's anger and jealousy over C.C.'s attention being divided between them led her to kill him out of revenge. She believes Mary couldn't stand the idea that C.C. was spending more time with Carley and wanted to punish him for his betrayal.

Lyle Wilson
Carley doesn't think Lyle is the killer, but she has noticed his jealousy. She's aware that Lyle didn't like how much time C.C. was spending teaching and mentoring her instead of him. Still, she doesn't believe that this would be enough of a motive for Lyle to kill C.C. She sees him as someone who might have felt slighted but not murderous.

William Wolf

Carley suspects that William doesn't like her, and she's convinced it's because he saw her as a distraction to both C.C. and the business. Carley feels that William never took her seriously, thinking of her as an outsider who disrupted their tight-knit world of business and family. She's aware that William was probably relieved by C.C.'s death, seeing it as an opportunity to take full control of the business without distractions.

Clue She Knows About (David Martin Hamilton):
Carley has recently come to a heartbreaking realization after reading David Martin Hamilton's obituary. She knows that David, the man she believed to be her father, couldn't have fathered her due to his infertility caused by his long-term illness. This revelation has left her shattered but also confirmed that C.C. must have been her real father all along. Carley is hurt by this truth, but she will not bring it up unless someone seems to have figured out the relationship between her and C.C. If pressed, she will reveal the truth, explaining how it broke her heart to learn this after C.C.'s death.

This sets Carley up as a character driven by complex emotionsanger, sadness, betrayal, and a desire for truth, which she hides until the right moment.

Lyle Wilson's Bio: Round 3

HisThoughts on People:

C.C. Wolf: As the night goes on, Lyle starts to feel more sympathy for C.C. He doesn't believe C.C. deserved what happened to him, even if they had their disagreements. He's not happy C.C. is dead.

Mary Wolf: Lyle thinks Mary is very kind and worries about how she will cope with everything. He knows she'll likely have to move in with her sister, Sarah, and wonders how she'll handle that.

William: Lyle has a growing suspicion that William could be the killer. The tension between William and C.C. was always obvious, and in Lyle's mind, William seems like a logical suspect.

Sarah: He finds Sarah pleasant enough whenever she visits the mansion, but doesn't have much to say about her.

Carley: Lyle doesn't think Carley is the killer. She always got what she wanted from C.C., and only just learned about her true parentage, so it wouldn't make much sense for her to act out of anger.

Verbina: Lyle is secretly in a relationship with Verbina. If guests start to piece this together, don't deny it if they provide enough evidence. Otherwise, keep the relationship under wraps.

Elma: Lyle thinks Elma is nice and knows she's Verbina's best friend. He doesn't suspect her at all.

Sam: Lyle has some suspicion about Sam, especially after Sam's public outburst earlier in the night. With Sam's past history with C.C., it's possible Sam had a reason to act.

Mrs. Lemon: Lyle is convinced that Mrs. Lemon doesn't like him, though he can'tor won'texplain why. He just "knows" she has something against him, but won't provide evidence.

Clues Lyle Knows:

Letter from Susie (Mrs. Lemon):

Lyle received a letter from Susie Lemon, who is Verbina's sister. The letter warns Lyle to stay away from Verbina, accusing him of being driven by greed and ambition. Susie makes it clear she doesn't trust him and won't let him ruin Verbina's life. Guests may piece together that Mrs. Lemon and Verbina are sisters, but Lyle won't admit to the connection unless the guests figure it out themselves.

Arsenic: THIS IS SUPER IMPORTANT Lyle will deny knowing anything about arsenic. If asked, he'll say he doesn't have any and doesn't know where to get it. However, the truth is he borrowed some arsenic from Verbina, which was used to poison C.C. The black spots on C.C.'s body are a symptom of arsenic poisoning. The guests will initially suspect Verbina due to her access to poison, but once they learn about her relationship with you. They will draw their suspicions over to you.
